Gregory A. Lewis

Principal

Greg Lewis is a principal in Miller Canfield's Intellectual Property group who regularly provides his clients with global patent procurement and portfolio management services, along with design patent, trademark and copyright counseling. He also focuses much of his practice on patent litigation and pre-litigation counseling. With a robust background as a former engineer and project manager at Lockheed Martin and Medtronic, Greg combines technical acumen with legal proficiency, particularly in materials science-, mechanical- and chemistry-driven technologies.

Greg collaborates closely with inventors to prosecute U.S. and international patent applications, prepare opinions and interview patent examiners. His prosecution practice encompasses a wide range of technologies, including glass, ceramic and glass-ceramic substrates, thin-films and coatings, adhesives, fittings, metal alloys, medical devices, electrochemical processes, semiconductors and other electronic device-related innovations.

Greg's IP litigation experience is extensive, having successfully handled patent and trademark cases involving automotive safety devices, semiconductors, aerospace alloys, digital audio integration in vehicles, adaptive cruise control systems, piston coatings, refrigerator shelf manufacturing, liquid crystal displays, helical pilings, countertop designs and poultry loading device technologies. His experience in these matters has run the gamut, including serving on a trial team, taking and defending depositions, appearing at hearings, serving as local counsel and working on joint defense group teams. His experience includes preparing various litigation work product such as summary judgment and claim construction briefs, discovery papers, expert reports, motions to compel, invalidity and infringement contentions. He has also negotiated and resolved various scheduling and discovery disputes with opposing counsel and co-counsel, and participated in various dispositive motion hearings, depositions, and pre-trial and jury trial proceedings

In addition to patent prosecution and IP litigation, Greg frequently drafts and negotiates simple and complex IP agreements, including joint development, joint assignee, license, asset purchase, non-disclosure and confidentiality agreements. He also counsels his clients on trade secret and non-compete agreement issues.
