

Miller Canfield Discusses Class Action and Multiple Plaintiff Lawsuits

February 21, 2005

The filing of a class action or multiple plaintiff lawsuit against a company generally signals the onset of an expensive, time consuming endeavor. The law firm of Miller, Canfield, Paddock and Stone, P.L.C. announces its next Morning Update – “How to Avoid Class Actions and Multiple Plaintiff Lawsuits and What to Do if You Can’t” – on Wednesday, March 2, from 8:00-9:00 a.m. at the law firm’s Troy office (840 West Long Lake Road, Suite 200).

Miller Canfield labor and employment law attorneys, Jerome R. Watson and Richard W. Warren, will focus on proactive and corrective measures a company can take to discourage the filing of these actions or to maximize the company’s chances of success if such actions are filed. This seminar will be of benefit to public and private employers of all sizes as the proactive measures apply with equal force to individual claims.

Morning Updates are informational seminars focusing on labor and employment law issues and are structured for human resources professionals, CEOs, and business owners. Cost is $20 per person and includes handouts, parking, and a continental breakfast starting at 7:30 a.m. Space is limited. Contact Virginia Herrick at 313/496-7548 or herrick@millercanfield.com for reservations.

Miller Canfield is pleased to offer special pricing for members of the Detroit Regional Chamber. For details call the Detroit Regional Chamber at 1-866-MBRLINE.
