

Miller Canfield Hosts Indian Automotive Executives

June 20, 2011

The law firm of Miller Canfield hosted a delegation of executives of Indian automotive component suppliers at the Troy Marriott Hotel in Troy, Mich. on June 7. The delegation was organized by India's Automotive Component Manufacturing Association (ACMA) and was in the U.S. to explore further business collaboration with the North American automotive industry.

ACMA is the key trade association for the Indian automotive component industry and is actively involved in the formulation of policies pertaining to the Indian automotive industry. ACMA represents over 600 Indian automotive component manufacturers.

Miller Canfield's Automotive Group and India Team presented an overview of doing business in North America and how to acquire and establish business operations in North America.

The India Team at Miller Canfield represents companies doing business with, in and from India and the U.S. The India Team is based in the firm's New York Office and also includes lawyers from the firm's offices in Detroit, Chicago and Canada. Lawyers qualified to practice in the U.S., India and other foreign jurisdictions provide global business services including establishing operations, investing in emerging enterprises, or outsourcing products and services in India.

While the firm's services include cross-border M&A, private equity, capital markets, debt restructuring, and general corporate advisory work relating to India, no U.S. law firm, including Miller Canfield, is authorized to practice law in India.
