In a recent interview, Tampa Managing Partner Amanda Buffinton spoke with the Tampa Bay Business Journal about what her recent leadership transition means for Shutts & Bowen, the changing market for legal talent and her experience as a woman in the legal world.

In the article, Amanda discussed how Alan Higbee's election to the firm's executive committee opened up a leadership opportunity in the Tampa office, following a recent trend of younger partners taking on leadership roles at the firm. Amanda explained that while strategic growth is important for Shutts, the firm's investment in its existing attorneys is important for succession planning and to ensure that its practice groups continue to thrive.

"We'll strategically continue to grow, and the word strategic is important. A lot of firms just want to grow, but we're not doing it for the numbers," said Amanda. "We want to get the right people in the right practice areas, and part of that is people putting their careers here."
