

Daniel Stabile Discusses Cryptocurrency Opportunities for Miami-Dade County

Miami Today

Miami Today reports that the Miami-Dade Cryptocurrency Task Force is exploring the possibility for the county to start accepting cryptocurrencies and other digital monetary forms as acceptable methods of payment countywide for taxes, fees and services. Task Force members agreed to study what has been done in other municipalities, survey county residents to evaluate their interest in cryptocurrency, search for vendors that could provide transaction and custodian services to the county, and work on recommendations of best practices.

Miami partner Daniel Stabile, who was recently named Vice Chairman of the Task Force, said:

"I was delighted to see that unanimously task force members at our first meeting were articulating the very same idea that the most important thing here is that if we're going to do this, we're doing it in a way that serves the people of Miami-Dade County."
