Ryan C. Reinert, a partner in Shutts & Bowen LLP's Tampa office, was recently featured in a Business Observer article discussing the expected tidal wave of commercial foreclosures and bankruptcies in the wake of expiring coronavirus relief funding.

The article, titled "Reckoning day: Lawyers ready for tidal wave of bankrupt businesses," discusses the end of key components of the federal government's coronavirus relief bill, which have kept businesses afloat for the past several months. Ryan provided insight on how the expiration of these protections and funding options will affect debtors and creditors as businesses move forward with bankruptcy proceedings. "By the end of the year, you're going to start seeing more filings of foreclosure cases," Ryan says, "and then those go through litigation, and then you end up with bankruptcy as an option."
