

Lazaro Vazquez and Francis Rodriguez Discuss Possible Consequences of Anti-Boycott Laws

1.4.18

In an article published in the Daily Business Review, Lazaro I. Vazquez and Francis E. Rodriguez discuss how U.S. anti-boycott laws can have consequences for those seeking to do business with foreign parties. The Israel Anti-Boycott Act, a bill in Congress considered by some to protect the interests of the United States and by others to violate the First Amendment right to free speech, has brought these issues to light.

Vazquez and Rodriguez caution practitioners negotiating cross-border deals to pay special attention to local clauses and their application to avoid penalties imposed by the U.S. Treasury. Consequences could include a partial loss of foreign tax credits and treatment of certain boycott-related income as Subpart F income. One way to avoid penalties would be to “except out” compliance penalized by U.S. law. Phrases such as “except to the extent such compliance is penalized under the law of the United States” or “except to the extent inconsistent with U.S. law” may be sufficient.
